LOTTIE DAVIES

The life changes imposed on each generation by conflict and global socio-economic collapse, as well as personal tragedy, produces a constant stream of people left untethered in the world, travelling to find a new home, a new purpose and to rebuild their place in the world. Many of the ancient byways along which Quinn has travelled remain as they were in the last century, and yet with the immutability of change and the unremitting nature of time passing, lives and memories change and fade.

BROAD WEIR DEVASTATED

48 Dead and 26 Seriously Wounded in Daylight Attack

Dreadful scenes in Bristol City centre as 500lb German bomb dropped from 20,000ft at 9.20 this morning. The bomb fell on Broad Weir close to the junction with Philadelphia Street, exploding on impact. The instant fire engulfed three city buses busy with people on their way to work, many of whom died at the scene.

Women and children are also among the dead. Despite their prompt arrival, the Fire Brigade could do little to save those trapped in the burning vehicles. Mr J. B. Burrige of the Bristol Fire Brigade said that "the buses were just twisted chassis, there was nothing we could do."

U.S. May Extend Banned Area

NEW YORK, Monday.
TODAY'S announcement that Britain has mined certain areas of Norwegian territorial waters raises the question of whether the war-time danger zone from which American ships are banned will be extended, says the Associated Press Washington corres-

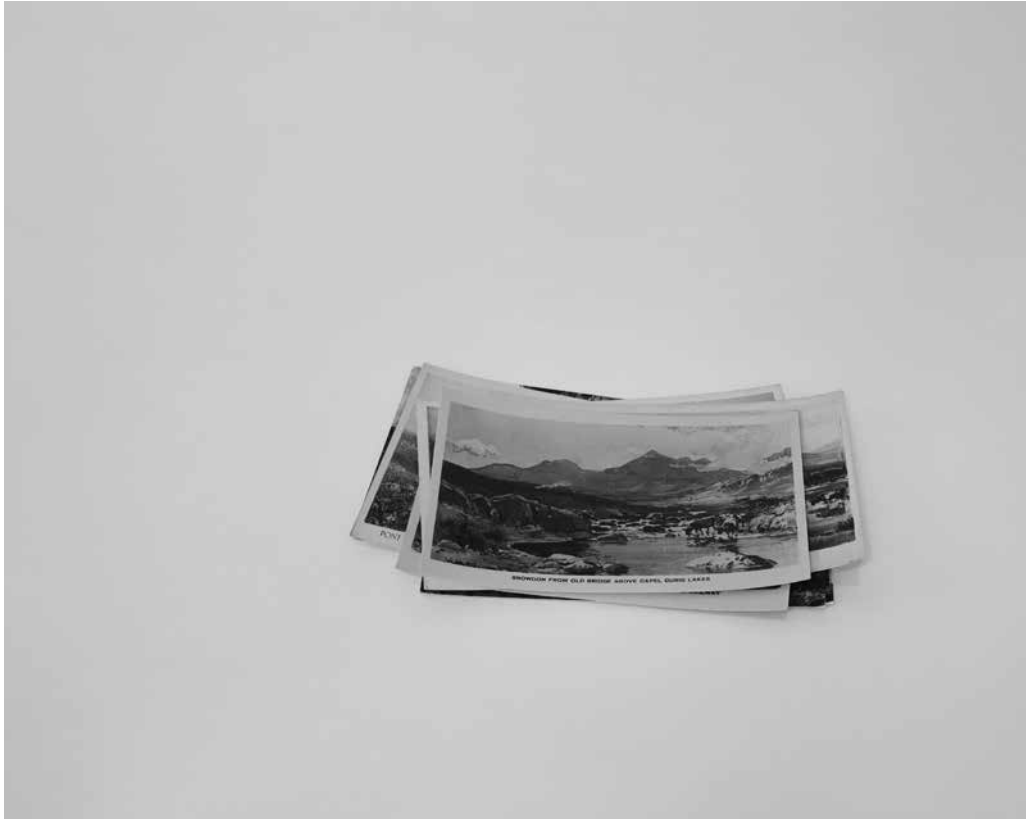

"There was no time to give any warning, it all happened so suddenly," said Mr R. Strutt, Warden for Civil Defence Service South Western.
 This attack by a Luftwaffe Junkers Ju86R is the most terrible the city has experienced in the war thus far being in broad daylight. There is no doubt that the attack was a deliberate one and to the
